

A Chapter of The American Institute of Architects
370 James Street, Suite 402, New Haven, CT 06513
203-865-2195 FAX: 203-562-5378
aiainfo@aiact.org, www.aiact.org

March 5, 2013

Chairman Doyle, Chairman Baram, Committee Members,

My name is Diane Harp Jones. I am the Executive with the Connecticut Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. On behalf of our approximately 1,250 members, we wish to speak AGAINST Raised Bill 6404, An Act Concerning Registered Interior Designers.

I testified earlier expressing our opposition to this bill but would like to provide more detail than addressed in my spoken remarks.

I testified that first and most critically, this bill is misleading to consumers. Additionally, it is not in the best interest of protecting public safety. Registered Interior Designers do not have the qualifications required by the State of Connecticut to produce documents which are assured to protect the life-safety aspects of those projects being stamped and sealed. Only the four, licensed professions identified in our State Statutes, architects, engineers, landscape architects and land surveyors, have the educational training to produce design and construction documents and stamp and seal those documents. Additionally they are not required to have the same level of professional liability insurance coverage as any of the four licensed professionals. Authorizing non-licensed professionals to stamp and seal documents will be confusing and misleading to consumers, as well as detrimental to insuring the safety of our public. In 2009 there were approximately 600 'registered interior designers' listed with the State of Connecticut Department of Consumer Protection. Approximately only slightly more than 100 of those 'registered interior designers' had registered by virtue of having completed the examination which 'registered interior designers' identify as the benchmark of their knowledge from education, in 2009. One half of those registered in 2009 were licensed architects. The remainders were 'grandfathered'. To permit someone with no qualifications other than years of work to stamp and seal documents that are being submitted for the approval of Building Officials is not in the best interest of protection the public. Building and Fire Safety Code knowledge, knowledge of loads and structures are but two areas that should generate serious concerns when considering having a non-licensed person stamp and seal documents.

Secondly, this will add a burden at the municipal level as Building Officials will be responsible for one more layer of unnecessary administration. Building Officials have no training on the stamping and sealing of documents from anyone other than licensed professionals. Will the State of Connecticut now provide added funding for the education and training that Building Officials are required to have for this new responsibly requiring they understand the limit of the scope of these stamps and seals from Interior Designers?

Page 1

Officers

Stephanie Degen-Monroe, AIA
President
Alan S. Lagocki, AIA
Vice President

Timothy L. Brewer, AIA
Secretary
Philip H. Cerrone, III, AIA
Treasurer

Directors

Brian P. Baril, Associate AIA
Daniel Casinelli, AIA
Richard T. Connell, AIA
George Fellner, AIA
John P. Franzen, AIA

Martin A. Onorato, Assoc. AIA
Julia Parker, AIA
John T. Stevens, AIA

Diane Harp Jones, CEO/EVP

A Chapter of The American Institute of Architects
370 James Street, Suite 402, New Haven, CT 06513
203-865-2195 FAX: 203-562-5378
aiainfo@aiact.org, www.aiact.org

Thirdly, there is no way to enforce this. What would the stamp and seal actually mean, what is the standard to which this would be held?

We suggest you reference the opinion written by Judge Kravitz in Roberts v. Farrell in 2009 when considering this Raised Bill. I am including a copy of the U.S. District Court decision from the Roberts v. Farrell case in 2009, for your convenience. There are numerous facts that raise the question for the need for the State to be providing added regulation in this area. This Raised Bill is restrictive to business in our State. We would suggest that there has never been any project, not a single one, within Connecticut where the lack of an Interior Designer's work has resulted negatively on public safety. What is the need for this Raised Bill? Why is the State 'registering' this occupation?

We would respectfully request that the entirety of Section 20-377l should be struck but as that is not being considered; we would ask that you NOT add authorization for the use of a professional seal by those who do not have the necessary qualifications. This would be detrimental to the public safety.

Thank you for your consideration.

Respectfully submitted,

Diane Harp Jones

Page 2

Officers

Stephanie Degen-Monroe, AIA
President
Alan S. Lagocki, AIA
Vice President

Diane Harp Jones, CEO/EVP

Timothy L. Brewer, AIA
Secretary
Philip H. Cerrone, III, AIA
Treasurer

Directors

Brian P. Baril, Associate AIA
Daniel Casinelli, AIA
Richard T. Connell, AIA
George Fellner, AIA
John P. Franzen, AIA

Martin A. Onorato, Assoc. AIA
Julia Parker, AIA
John T. Stevens, AIA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT

SUSAN ROBERTS, LYNNE HERMANN, :
and CYNTHIA HERNANDEZ, :

Plaintiffs, :

v. :

NO. 3:08CV1356 (MRK)

JERRY FARRELL, JR., in his official :
capacity as Commissioner of the :
Connecticut Department of Consumer :
Protection, :

Defendant. :

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

Connecticut defines an "interior designer" as an individual "qualified by education, experience and examination who":

(A) identifies, researches and creatively solves problems pertaining to the function and quality of the interior environment; and (B) performs services relative to interior spaces, including programming, design analysis, space planning and aesthetics, using specialized knowledge of non-load-bearing interior construction, building systems and components, building codes, equipment, materials and furnishings; and (C) prepares plans and specifications for non-load-bearing interior construction, materials, finishes, space planning, reflected ceiling plans, furnishings, fixtures and equipment relative to the design of interior spaces in order to enhance and protect the health, safety and welfare of the public.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 20-377k. Plaintiffs Susan Roberts, Lynne Herrmann, and Cynthia Hernandez each perform such interior design services in this State. Thus, since 1982, Susan Roberts has operated an antique furniture and interior design business called the "Idea Factory" and has provided residential and commercial interior design services to clients in Connecticut and other states. See Pls.' Motion for Preliminary Injunction [doc. # 19] Ex. A ("Declaration of Susan Roberts") at ¶¶ 2, 7. Since 2004, Lynne Hermann has operated an Interiors by Decorating Den franchise and has provided residential interior design services in Connecticut. See id. Ex. B ("Declaration of Lynne Herrmann") at ¶ 2. Cynthia Hernandez operates an interior design business called "Ideal Interiors, LLC, d/b/a Interiors by Decorating Den" and provides residential interior design services in Connecticut. See id. Ex. C ("Declaration of Cynthia Hernandez") at ¶¶ 3, 4.

Plaintiffs brought this action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Defendant Jerry Farrell, Jr., Commissioner of the Connecticut Department of Consumer Protection, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the enforcement of a Connecticut law that Plaintiffs claim censors their truthful commercial speech by forbidding them from calling themselves "interior designers." Notably, the State does not regulate the practice of interior design, which means that Plaintiffs may, and they lawfully do, render interior design services to consumers in the State. However, Connecticut is now the only state in the Nation to prohibit Plaintiffs from calling themselves "interior designers" or describing their services as "interior design," even though that is precisely the services Plaintiffs regularly and lawfully perform in the State.

The specific statutory provision that Plaintiffs challenge states as follows:

No person shall use the title "interior designer" or display or use any words, letters, figures, title, advertisement or other device to indicate that he is an interior designer, unless he (1) has obtained a certificate of registration as provided in sections 20-377k to 20-377v, inclusive; or (2) is an architect licensed in this state; or (3) has used or was identified by the title of "interior designer" for at least one year immediately preceding October 1, 1983.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 20-377l. Given that Plaintiffs do not fall within the second and third categories of individuals allowed to use the term "interior designer," Plaintiffs must obtain a certificate of registration as provided under the statutory scheme before they may refer to themselves as "interior designers." Because none of the Plaintiffs has obtained the requisite certificate of registration, each of them may perform interior design services in the State but may not call herself an "interior designer" or advertise or describe the work she regularly and lawfully perform as "interior design." According to Plaintiffs, this complete ban on their describing themselves as "interior designers" or their work as "interior design" violates their First and Fourteenth Amendment rights under the U.S. Constitution. The Court agrees.

I.

On January 14, 2009, Plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction to restrain the Commissioner from enforcing §§ 20-377l to 20-377v pending resolution of their case on the merits. After the Court's on-the-record telephonic conference with the parties on January 22, 2009, counsel agreed that it was both feasible and appropriate for Plaintiffs' case to proceed on an accelerated schedule to a final judgment on the merits in lieu of a ruling on Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction [doc. # 19]. After engaging in expedited discovery, the parties informed the Court on April 15, 2009 that they foresaw two possible means of resolving this case: (1) a bench trial on the merits on the basis of stipulated facts and legal briefing from the parties; and (2) legislative action requested by Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal and Commissioner Farrell, which the parties agreed would moot Plaintiffs' constitutional challenge by changing the regulated term in § 20-377l from "interior designer" to "registered interior designer." See Substitute for Raised S.B. 1002, as amended by Senate Amendment "B" (LCO No. 6967).¹ After again conferring with the

¹ The proposed legislative amendment to § 20-377l states as follows:

No person shall use the title "registered interior designer" or display or use any words, letters, figures, title, advertisement or other device to indicate that such person is a registered interior designer, unless such person (1) has obtained a certificate of registration as provided in sections 20-377k to 20-377v, inclusive; or (2) is an architect licensed in this state.

parties during an on-the-record telephonic conference on April 27, 2009, the Court denied the Commissioner's motion to stay the proceedings until the Connecticut General Assembly considered the proposed legislative amendment. The Commissioner stated he would continue to pursue the legislative amendment and, although the Court and the parties were optimistic that remedial legislation would pass the Connecticut General Assembly, the Court scheduled a preliminary injunction hearing immediately following the close of the legislature's regular session.

Although the proposed amendment to § 20-3771 passed the Connecticut Senate by a unanimous vote of 36-0 on May 26, 2009, the Connecticut House of Representatives did not consider the amendment before the end of the regular legislative session on June 3, 2009. Thus, the Court proceeded with the preliminary injunction hearing scheduled for June 5, 2009. At the hearing, the parties agreed that there was no need for additional discovery in the case and that apart from the continued potential for a legislative amendment to § 20-3771 during the General Assembly's special session, there was no reason not to move to a final adjudication of Plaintiffs' claims. The parties also agreed that the Court could decide the case on the basis of their factual stipulations and that the Court should proceed to a final hearing on the merits, rather than taking up the request for a preliminary injunction. That same day, the Commissioner represented to the Court and the parties that given his commitment to seeking a legislative amendment, the Department of Consumer Protection would not enforce § 20-3771 pending those efforts and at least until December 1, 2009. See Attachment to Order [doc. # 35] (Letter from Commissioner dated June 5, 2009). Therefore, the parties stipulated to an order of this Court restraining the Commissioner from enforcing § 20-3771 pending the Court's final decision on the merits and until further order of the Court. See Order [doc. # 35].

Although the Court, as well as the parties and their counsel, remained hopeful that the General Assembly would expeditiously act on the proposed amendment during its special session, the General Assembly has unfortunately not acted on the legislation. Therefore, the Court turns to the merits of Plaintiffs' claim. Before proceeding further, however, the Court pauses briefly to commend the parties, their counsel, and the Attorney General and Commissioner on their cooperation during this case as well as their commitment to seeking a legislative resolution of Plaintiffs' claim. The Court had hoped that the legislature would solve this issue on its own, and the Court and the parties have waited patiently for legislative action. Plaintiffs filed this action almost one year ago, in early-September 2008, and initially moved for preliminary relief in January 2009. They have shown the utmost patience as the Commissioner sought to work with the legislature to amend § 20-377l. However, in a telephonic conference with the parties on June 29, 2009, counsel for the Commissioner could not provide any definite timetable for legislative change. Thus, the Court and Plaintiffs have now waited for almost an additional month without any further action by the General Assembly as to § 20-377l. Although an order restraining the Commissioner from enforcing § 20-377l has remained in effect since June 5, 2009, given that there is no indication when, or even if, the General Assembly will act on a legislative fix, Plaintiffs deserve a ruling on their claim so they may move forward with their livelihoods. The State has now had ample time to enact any legislative solution to this controversy.

After considering the parties' briefs and stipulations of fact, as well as the skilled arguments of both counsel at the June 5, 2009 hearing, the Court hereby GRANTS Plaintiffs' request for permanent injunctive relief as well as a declaratory judgment that § 20-377l is unconstitutional. For the reasons that follow, the Court finds that § 20-377l violates Plaintiffs' First and Fourteenth Amendment rights under the U.S. Constitution by impermissibly restricting their commercial speech.

II.

Under Connecticut law, any person may perform interior design work in the state without first obtaining a license from or registering with the State.² Plaintiffs Susan Roberts, Lynne Hermann, and Cynthia Hernandez lawfully perform interior design services in Connecticut, and each Plaintiff considers herself to be, and wishes to identify herself as, an "interior designer." There are four ways to be registered as an interior designer in Connecticut: (1) pass either of two national examinations (the National Counsel for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ) Examination or the Interior Design Society's Uniform National Examination); (2) be licensed as an architect in Connecticut; (3) be registered as an interior designer in another state having registration standards equal to or greater than those in Connecticut; or (4) demonstrate that the registrant has used or was identified by the title of "interior designer" for one year or more immediately preceding October 1, 1983 and obtained registration prior to July 1, 1991. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 20-3771.

As to those individuals qualifying by examination, the NCIDQ examination and the Uniform National Examination are formulated and administered by private bodies over which the State of Connecticut has no direct control. Both the NCIDQ and the Interior Design Society establish their own eligibility requirements to sit for those examinations. The State of Connecticut likewise has no direct control over those eligibility requirements. The examinations test knowledge and skills relating to consumer protection, public health, life safety, and welfare, among other subjects. Subject matters covered in the examinations include professional ethics, contract documents and ² The Court takes the following facts from the parties' Stipulations of Fact dated May 7, 2009. See Pls.' Supplemental Brief in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunction [doc. # 32] Ex. A.

3771 differs from the California statute in American Academy of Pain Management because it prohibits Plaintiffs from using the most accurate title for their professional design services, services that the State allows them to lawfully perform. Therefore, under Central Hudson, Plaintiffs' expression is entitled to First Amendment protection because it is commercial speech that is neither unlawful nor inherently misleading.

Next, the Court considers whether the Commissioner has demonstrated that the State's asserted interest in protecting consumers from being misled as to the title "interior designer" is substantial, and whether that interest is directly advanced by the restriction on use of the title "interior designer" under § 20-3771. See Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 566. It is important to note that the Commissioner does not assert that the State has a substantial interest in the delivery of interior design-related services; nor could he, given the State's failure to regulate the practice of interior design in Connecticut. Thus, the State does not seek to prevent anyone from offering interior design services to consumers or from performing interior design work in Connecticut. Rather, the Commissioner argues that Connecticut has a substantial interest in securing the special meaning that it has assigned to the title "interior designer." In addition, the Commissioner claims that the State has a substantial interest in protecting consumers from individuals who would otherwise call themselves "interior designers" despite failing to meet specific educational and experiential requirements or to submit to the State's regulatory process.

Plaintiffs concede that consumer protection can be a substantial state interest, but they argue that the Commissioner's asserted interests neither protect consumers nor respond to a demonstrated need for commercial regulation in this field. Although the parties stipulate that they "are not aware of any evidence that any consumer has ever been deceived, misled, or otherwise injured by a person's use of the term 'interior designer' to describe him- or herself," Stipulations of Fact [doc. # 32] Ex. A at ¶ 10, Plaintiffs acknowledge that consumers may not have reported to the Commissioner all title-related injuries they may have suffered. However, Plaintiffs take issue with what they deem is a complete lack of evidence regarding the need for a total ban on their use of the title "interior designer," and thus, the Commissioner's assertion that the State's interest in regulating Plaintiffs' speech is substantial and directly advanced by § 20-377l. Moreover, Plaintiffs argue that the existence of the grandfather provision under § 20-377l(3) undermines the State's asserted interest in protecting consumers from being misled or deceived by unregistered individuals who would otherwise call themselves "interior designers" even though they lack the requisite professional credentials required for registration under state law. According to Plaintiffs, individuals who were grandfathered in under § 20-377l(3) need not have any specific education or experience and despite this, are able to call themselves "interior designers" without having to make any sort of public disclosure that they have not attained certain educational requirements that other "interior designers" have obtained. Thus, say Plaintiffs, Connecticut's restriction of "interior designer" cannot convey a certain level of education or experience to consumers or assist consumers in making informed decisions when hiring design professionals.

Although the Commissioner admonishes Plaintiffs for seeking specific evidence that demonstrates that the State's asserted interest in protecting consumers from their commercial speech is substantial and directly advanced by the title restriction in § 20-377l, the Supreme Court has made clear that a State must do more than invoke abstract ideals or speculation to satisfy its burden under Central Hudson. See Florida Bar v. Went for It, Inc., 515 U.S. 618 (1995). In Went for It, the Supreme Court examined a Florida rule that prohibited personal injury lawyers from sending direct-mail solicitations to accident victims and their relatives within 30 days of an accident. See id. at 620. There, the Supreme Court noted that it had previously accepted that "States have a compelling interest in the practice of professions within their boundaries, and . . . as part of their power to protect the public health, safety, and other valid interests they have broad power to establish standards for licensing practitioners and regulating the practice of professions." Id. at 625. However, after recognizing the State's interest in protecting the public, the Supreme Court emphasized that "the State must demonstrate that the challenged regulation advances the Government's interest in a direct and material way," which requires it to show "that the harms it recites are real and that its restrictions will in fact alleviate them to a material degree." Id. at 625-26 (quotation marks omitted); see also Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 564; Bad Frog Brewery, 134 F.3d at 98. A state could meet this burden by relying on empirical data, studies, or anecdotes (whether in-state or extra-jurisdictional) or by reference to history, consensus, and common sense. Id. at 628. In rejecting the plaintiffs' challenge in Went for It, the Supreme Court cited many examples where the state had targeted "a concrete, nonspeculative harm." Id. at 626-29.

The Court recognizes that the Commissioner need not cite empirical evidence in support of its regulation. However, this case is unlike Went for It in its complete lack of any "evidence" (even construed most broadly) to support the Commissioner's asserted need to protect consumers from the use of the term "interior design" by individuals who lawfully perform those services in the State. Neither common sense, history or even consensus supports this restriction, see Bad Frog Brewery, 134 F.3d at 100; indeed, Connecticut is now the only state in the Nation with a law restricting use of the term "interior design." Therefore, this case strikes the Court as much more similar to the ban on solicitation by certified public accountants that the Supreme Court struck down in Edenfield v.

Fane, 507 U.S. 761 (1993), precisely because Florida offered no evidence in support of its speech restriction. See id. at 771. The only evidence the Commissioner points to in support of the State's asserted need to protect consumers from use of the term "interior design" is a study from Texas that the Fifth Circuit explicitly rejected as insufficient in Byrum. See Byrum, 2009 WL 1068435, at *3-4 (assigning no probative value to the study because of its flawed methodology). Moreover, the Court seriously doubts the Commissioner's argument that § 20-377l may operate as a prophylactic rule under Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447 (1978), because as the Supreme Court recognized in Fane, "Ohralik in no way relieves the State of the obligation to demonstrate that it is regulating speech in order to address what is in fact a serious problem and that the preventative measure it proposes will contribute in a material way to solving that problem." 507 U.S. at 776.

As a consequence, the Court has considerable doubt that § 20-377l addresses a substantial state interest. Moreover, even assuming, without deciding, that Connecticut's interest in protecting consumers from the misuse of the title "interior designer" is substantial, the Court is also skeptical of the Commissioner's ability to show that the title restriction directly advances the State's asserted interest. See Bad Frog Brewery, 134 F.3d at 100 ("The truth of these propositions is not so self-evident as to relieve the state of the burden of marshalling some empirical evidence to support its assumptions."). However, the Court need not decide these issues because even assuming – without deciding – that the Commissioner has shown a substantial interest in protecting consumers from misuse of the title "interior designer" that is directly advanced by the title restriction in § 20-377l, the Court concludes that such a restriction is not reasonably tailored to serve the State's asserted interest.

As the Supreme Court itself has noted, the "critical inquiry" in determining the legality of a restriction on commercial speech is whether the "complete suppression of speech ordinarily protected by the First Amendment is no more extensive than necessary to further the State's interest." Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 569-70. Thus, in Central Hudson, the Supreme Court explained that "[t]he State cannot regulate speech that poses no danger to the asserted state interest . . . nor can it completely suppress information when narrower restrictions on expression would serve its interest as well." Id. at 565. Therefore, this Court must examine carefully the "fit" between Connecticut's asserted interest in protecting consumers from being misled and the scope of its restriction on Plaintiffs' lawful commercial speech. While the Court need only find that the "fit" is reasonable, not perfect, "the existence of numerous and obvious less-burdensome alternatives to the restriction on commercial speech . . . is certainly a relevant consideration in determining whether the 'fit' between ends and means is reasonable." Went for It, 515 U.S. at 632. As with the other Central Hudson factors, it is the Commissioner's burden to demonstrate that § 20-377l is reasonably tailored to serve Connecticut's interest in consumer protection. Central Hudson, 447 U.S. at 570; Bad Frog Brewery, 134 F.3d at 98. For several reasons, the Court concludes that the Commissioner has not satisfied his burden.

First, when Connecticut Attorney General Blumenthal and Commissioner Farrell requested the assistance of the Co-Chairs of the Connecticut General Law Committee with respect to their proposed amendment to § 20-377l, they stated that, in their view, "the title 'registered interior designer' will more accurately convey to the public both the existence of a registration regime and that any person using such a title has complied with that regime. At the same time, there would be no barrier to entry for individuals who would like to practice interior design and call themselves interior designers, but who are not registered or eligible for registration." Pls.' Suppl. Br. in Supp.

of Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [doc. # 32] Ex. B (Letter from Attorney General Richard Blumenthal and Commissioner Jerry Farrell to Senator Thomas Colapietro and Representative Jim Shapiro dated April 14, 2009). Moreover, in the parties' stipulation, the Commissioner stated that he "does not contend that regulating the more specialized terms 'licensed interior designer,' 'registered interior designer,' or 'certified interior designer' – rather than 'interior designer' by itself – would be ineffective in advancing whatever government interest may be implicated by Connecticut's interior design registration law." See id. Ex. A at ¶ 14. Although the Court appreciates the candor of the Attorney General and the Commissioner, as well as their attempt to seek a legislative solution to this case, these statements concede, as they must, that there is an "obvious less-burdensome alternative" to the current restriction on Plaintiffs' commercial speech.

As the Supreme Court instructed in Went for It, a court may consider the existence of a less-burdensome alternative to the challenged restriction as relevant in determining whether the fit between the State's ends and means is reasonable. The Court believes that this consideration becomes even more relevant where the Attorney General and Commissioner have acknowledged that "[s]imilar requirements [to Connecticut's] in other states have been uniformly struck down as an unconstitutional infringement of First Amendment rights," Pls.' Suppl. Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Prelim. Inj. [doc. # 32] Ex B, and they have continued to advocate for a less-burdensome alternative to the current restriction. See Attachment to Order [doc. # 35].

Second, as the Court has previously noted, the Commissioner has stated that the State has an interest not in the delivery of interior design services but rather in safeguarding the statutory meaning assigned to "interior designer" and in protecting consumers from being misled by the improper use of that title. However, as the Court emphasized at oral argument, the term "interior designer" is a generic term that conveys no particular educational or experiential credentials on the part of an individual. This is especially true given that one-quarter of registered interior designers in Connecticut fall under the grandfather provision in § 20-377l(3) and therefore may lack the education, experience, and certification held by the remaining percentage of "interior designers" registered with the State.

If the State were seeking to convey the existence of a regulatory regime in this field, then a term such as "licensed interior designer" or "registered interior designer" would far better serve that interest, as the rest of the states who have decided to regulate this field have concluded. In fact, this is precisely what Connecticut has done in other fields of endeavor, many of which also have practice restrictions.⁴ Amending Connecticut's title restriction of interior designers in a similar manner would more accurately convey that registered or certified individuals had submitted to the State's oversight. In addition, the use of narrower terms such as "licensed interior designer," "certified interior designer," or "registered interior designer" would actually expand consumer choice and further consumer protection because it would alert Connecticut residents to the existence of a statutory registration or certification scheme, while simultaneously allowing Plaintiffs to compete in the market for interior design services. As such, the States's asserted interest could be more effectively met by a more limited regulation.

⁴ For example, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 20-206p states that "[n]o person who is not certified by the Department of Public Health as a dietitian-nutritionist shall represent himself as being so certified" Other statutes incorporate both title and practice restrictions. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. § 20-362(a) ("No person shall engage in, practice, or offer to perform the work of a sanitarian, as defined in section 20-358, unless he is licensed pursuant to section 20-361."); § 20-369 ("No person . . . shall engage in the practice of landscape architecture in this state or use the title 'landscape architect' or display or use any words, letters, figures, title, signs, seal, advertisement or other device to indicate that such person practices or offers to practice landscape architecture in this state, unless such person has first secured a license as provided in this chapter.").

properly advanced by the State. See also Bad Frog Brewery, 134 F.3d at 101 ("NYSLA's complete statewide ban on use of Bad Frog's labels lacks a 'reasonable fit' with the state's asserted interest in shielding minors from vulgarity, and NYSLA gave inadequate consideration to alternatives to this blanket suppression of commercial speech."). Because the Commissioner has not demonstrated a reasonable "fit" between § 20-377l and the commercial speech at issue, he has failed to satisfy his burden under Central Hudson.

IV.

Accordingly, the Court concludes, and declares, that § 20-377l of the Connecticut General Statutes, as currently written, violates Plaintiffs' First and Fourteenth Amendment right to expression under the U.S. Constitution. The Commissioner is permanently enjoined from enforcing § 20-377l. The Clerk shall enter judgment for Plaintiffs and close this file.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Mark R. Kravitz
United States District Judge

Dated at New Haven, Connecticut: June 30, 2009.